People are worried about pollution and the environment. Recently, more people are buying electric or hybrid cars because they are 11 than gasoline-based transport. Now that we are 12 to make our roads cleaner, can we do the same thing for our skies? Can airplanes be made greener?

The amount of air travel has increased a lot in recent 13. The number of people flying is 75 times bigger than it was in 1960. People travel by plane much more often and go much further than they used to. Aircraft designs have changed, and planes are generally more economic and efficient than they used to be. In 14 of this progress, air travel makes up about 2.5 percent of CO₂ released into our atmosphere.

Electric planes need batteries. These batteries 15 much less energy than jet fuel of the same weight. Also, a plane with jet fuel gets lighter as fuel is 16 but an electric plane will not. Nonetheless, many companies see electric planes as a big 17 for the future and are changing all their ideas in order to make electric planes better and faster.

While engines on most planes are big and powerful, an electric plane can move with a lot of smaller engines. The batteries and engines can also be moved to different places in the plane. This is 18 designers change the shape of the plane, and many of the new designs may not look familiar.

For now, most of the planes being built are quite small. The 19 commercial electric plane can carry nine passengers. The process of getting more electric planes into the sky is not going to be fast. However, designers, companies, and other experts are 20 that the process is beginning, and we can expect to see more electric planes in the future.
